I am opposed to any elimination of my XM satellite radio's weather and traffic information broadcasting. This is a subscribed service that I pay for monthly. When traveling throughout the country, I can not always find the local weather nor have I ever found anything related to traffic information. For this reason, and because I pay for the XM service, I see no reason that the FCC should interrupt my ability to receive this service. I consider this service the same as my satellite service that I pay for in my home - which includes the weather channel that is NOT a local station.
